

Jute Wall Hanging (Tribal Man)

Long before the invention of modern man-made fibres, natural fibres were spun to make yarns. These yarns were then woven to make cloth, ropes and similar products.

Jute fibres are made from the jute plant. Originally jute was used to make sackcloth. However, over the years, it has been discovered that jute is far more versatile and it is now being used to make sophisticated textile products and decorative objects like this wall hanging of the deity Ganesh.

In the Hindu religion, the elephant-headed God, Ganesh, brings joy and happiness to the family and may helps remove all obstacles.
